Mr. Ben Wyatt, chief clerk in the office of the State Superintendent of public instruction, announces the announcement that he will be a candidate to succeed Mr. McChesney, the incumbent, who is disqualified for re-election.

The Republicans of Louisville are serving notices by the hundreds on qualified Democratic voters to show cause why their name should not be stricken from the registration books. Their game is to save their own fraudulent voters.

The famous old Goebel mansion at 1220 Scott street, in Covington, has long been conspicuous because of the political prominence of the late William Goebel, has been razed to the ground, and the lot upon which it stood will be sold. Mr. Goebel would not allow the property to be sold in his lifetime, although several liberal propositions were made by parties to remove the old building and erect a modern structure in its stead. There his father and mother lived for many years in humble circumstances.

The disorder at the Empire mine in Christian county, continues and shots are constantly being fired from ambush, alarming the miners and creating much excitement. Guards are on duty at the mines, which are being operated with a full force of workmen.

Frankfort, Ky., Oct. 10.—Mr. Kinney Warren, a diminutive negro, aged nine, was received at the state penitentiary to serve five years for grand larceny. He is the youngest convict ever received. Gov. Beckham has directed that he be transferred to the State Reformatory School at Lexington. He was received from Warren county.

Postmaster Trimble, of Somerset, has been required to make good $481, difference in postage rates for having permitted a publisher to place certain printing on the wrappers of his papers, and still obtain publishers' rates. The publisher refused to pay postage at the higher rates, having the authorization of the postmaster.

Two of the fugitive Goebel suspects, John Powers and Berry Howard have been located in Harland and Bell counties, respectively, but the Commonwealth is advised that their arrest at this time would be useless, as the County Judges would release them, as was done when Powers was arrested in Knox county.

The jury in the Powers case was finally completed at Georgetown, and the defense filed a motion for a discharge of the whole box, on the ground of its political complexion. A supporting affidavit claimed, among other things, that Powers was a victim of persecution on account of his political belief and that the jury was "fixed." Judge Cantrill overruled the motion to disqualify the jury and also a request for permission to file a demurrer to the indictment. Though balked in these tactics for delay, the defense is confident it will be able to kill enough more time to keep the case from being finished at this term of court, thus securing a mistrial.

What is believed to be a wild woman is terrorizing the Taggart Creek community, in Bell county. The creature it is reported has long black hair, and resembles a woman in many respects. One of the stories is that the thing was first seen nearly two weeks ago by John Lane, a farmer, of Taggart Creek. He was watering his horses when the woman, if such it proves to be, sprang nearly forty feet from a tree on the horse he was riding. She screamed fearfully and tried to scratch him. After great difficulty he beat her off and fled. Since then the creature has been seen by some of the best and most reliable people of that community. The creature proved to be a woman by the way she went after that man.

It is believed that this is the last engagement the President made.

The rich find is located seventy miles north of Tucson, and the vein of ore, according to the Flemings, is two hundred feet wide and six thousand feet in length. A canon cuts through the vein for two hundred feet, exposing the ore on either side the entire length of the out.

Question Answered.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers and grandmothers never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. For sale by R. F. Haynes and J. H. Orme. Get Green's Prize Almanac.

Henry Brydon Harris, N. C. says: "I took medicine 20 years for asthma, but one bottle of One Minute Cough Cure did me more good than anything else during that time. Best Cough Cure. J. F. Haynes."

ANTI-SALOON

People Win at Salem—Prominent Farmer Injured.

The election held in Salem magisterial district to decide the whiskey question resulted in victory for the "drys," the vote standing 128 for and 174 against the sale of liquors in that district, a majority of forty-six votes against.

The contest was rather warm and both the "wets" and "drys" were busy until the close of the polls.

This settles the question for three years, so far as Salem is concerned, and the anti-whisky people are quite jubilant over their victory.

Mr. Wm. Duley, a well known farmer of the Dyer Hill locality, was thrown from a mule and badly injured. He was also kicked several times before he could get out of reach of the frightened animal and he is now in a dangerous condition, one arm and one leg being broken and his face terribly bruised and lacerated. Owing to his advanced age his recovery is doubtful.

John Gaynor, another of the Paducah prisoners who have been in jail at Smithland since circuit court, charged with complicity in a criminal assault on Edith Beasley, alleged to have been committed on Livingston Point several months ago, executed bond and was released.

Strange Twins.

Harrodsburg, Ky., Oct. 5.—The Coleman twins—Sidney and Smith—from Anderson county, were here yesterday. They look as much alike as one rabbit does like another, and are world beaters. They married sisters, the wedding being a double one, the same minister performing the ceremony. Each has three children, the first of each being a son, both born the same day and in the same house. The second child of each is a daughter, both making their appearance in the world the same day. The third child of each is a girl, they too being born the same day.

Pathy seems to exist between brothers. Some time since Smith was at work at home in the field, and when he went home he told the women that Sid, who was ten miles away, with a thrasher, must have hurt his foot, for he had felt a shock at 10 o'clock. Sure enough, that afternoon Sid came home with three mashed toes. The twins are now twenty-eight years old, and they weigh identically the same.

Princeton Presbytery.

Princeton Presbytery of the C. P. church held its fall session at Bayon Creek, in Livingston county, Oct. 8-10.

The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. H. C. Temple, of Princeton, Ky.

Rev. G. L. Woodruff was elected Moderator.

There were fourteen congregations represented and eight ordained ministers present. The sessions during the presbytery were of high order, and full of spiritual power.

Tuesday was spent in the Elders' and Deacons' Association. The discussion was on the subject of giving to the Lord and was full of interest.

Wednesday afternoon was spent in an interesting Sunday School institute.

The Stated Clerk reported that one of our ministers, Rev. James Wilson, of Madisonville, had died since last Presbytery.

Rev. E. C. Leeper was ordained to the full work of the ministry.

An earnest appeal was made to the churches to support our worn-out ministers and their families through the Board of Ministerial Relief. Solicitors are to be appointed in every congregation to try to raise $300 annually for the education of the young men of the Presbytery.

Quite a number of churches were censured for not sending up their church books to be examined.

Temperance and the observance of the Sabbath were emphasized in very strong terms. The members were urged to take our church paper and to buy and read it some at least, of our many good books.

The mission work was emphasized and the first week in November, beginning with the first Sunday, was set apart as a week of self-denial and prayer for foreign missions.

A committee was appointed to hold Sunday School Conventions and Institutes, and a reading for Sunday school teachers was ordered to be printed in the minutes.

The next meeting of Presbytery will be held at Stuttgart, in Union county.

Jas. F. Price.

Once in Congress, Now a Cook.

Edward R. Ridgely, who retired from the office of Representative from the Third Kansas district on March 4, 1901, is today cooking and working for his board and a place to sleep in Lawton, O. T.

When Mr. Ridgely was elected to Congress in 1896, he owned a half interest in a mercantile business in Pittsburg, Kansas, but he sold his share to his brother; when he left the office he had little money and no profession to fall back upon. He lived in Pittsburg for a time, without doing anything, and finally drifted to the Kiowa country in search of a place and opportunity to begin life again.

Mr. Ridgely was found in Lawton last week by Col. Frederick Donelson, who had been one of his political supporters in former years. Col. Donelson says that when he saw Mr. Ridgely the former Representative had just returned from an errand for the grocer who gives him his board. He was carrying a large piece of ice in a sack on his back.

The former Representative said he had been offered a chance to sleep in the grocery wagon and a job of cooking and running errands for his board. He said the accommodations were not as good as he had had, but he could not complain, and was looking for a chance to make a fortune. [Topeka letter to the New York Herald.]

Get Your Money's Worth.

It is hard to appreciate the worth of Morley's Wonderful Elixir until you have used it in a score of the emergencies that come in every household. Dr. T. A. Barnhart of Claiborne parish, La., says: "Permit me to say I have tried Morley's Wonderful Elixir and found it a good medicine in Pleurisy and Pneumonia." Nothing equals it in relieving colds. Price 25c at H. K. Woods & Co's.

Why Osteopathy is Popular.

It is a fact that the osteopath in a few weeks or months obtains a standing with the best people in his community that it would take a physician years to acquire.

The reasons for this are many and obvious. In the first place the theory of the science of osteopathy is a rational and common sense one. There is nothing vague, mysterious, or occult about it; but being based upon the laws of nature, it commends itself to the unprepared and thinking mind.

Another thing that tends to popularize it is the plain and reasonable system of charges usually adopted by the osteopath—a system whereby the patient is enabled to tell approximately what it is going to cost him to regain health. The treatment is undertaken with the knowledge that there will be no bill for medicine, extra visits, etc., at the final reckoning.

Almost every one dislikes to take medicine. There is hardly an adult to be found who has not many times been depressed and sickened by heroic doses of drugs, and as the Irishman expressed it, "felt sick a long time after he got well." If osteopathy did nothing but abolish experimental doses by poisonous drugs and curtail the number of surgical operations, it would be worthy of the gratitude of countless sufferers.

And finally, osteopathy has loyal defenders and warm adherents among all classes, because of results obtained by its practitioners. "Nothing succeeds like success," it is results that tell.

What the invalid wants is to get well. He is not so much interested in the name of the school of healing to which his doctor belongs as he is in the fact that he can do what he claims to do. It is by this standard that osteopathy asks to be judged. While the claim is not made for it that it is a cure-all, or that it has eliminated death from the world, yet the fact remains that it has brought health and vigor to the body and cheer to the heart of many an invalid from whom all hope had vanished forever.

These are but a few of the reasons why osteopathy has firm, loyal friends wherever it has been introduced by competent and conscientious osteopaths. If you are sick and suffering try osteopathy. If you desire the most profitable profession, try osteopathy.

Does it Pay to Buy Cheap?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the most severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible. If not possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success for throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest, and cures the patient. Try ONE bottle. Recommended many years by all druggists in the world. For sale by R. F. Haynes and Jas. H. Orme. Get Green's Prize Almanac.

If Man Were a Flea.

Snyder, the calculating barber, had not opened his eyes for fully four minutes, and it was plain to be seen that he had not been to bed. Finally he swallowed twice, breathed hard for a moment and gave vent to his feelings in this manner:

"I've been thinking what I could do if I were only a flea. I read in a scientific paper the other day that if a man were built on the same lines as a flea he could jump from Philadelphia to Pittsburg in one leap. I mean, of course, if he had all the power of a flea increased in proportion to his size. Think how quickly he could circumnavigate the globe. It might be possible to get around the world in an hour. The distance from Philadelphia to Pittsburg is 354 miles, and the equatorial circumference of the earth is 24,902 miles.

"A simple calculation in mental arithmetic will show you that this would be a fraction over 70 leaps. It surely wouldn't take a minute for each jump, judged from the liveliness of the flea. Think of coming in here, with three or four customers ahead of you, and, instead of sitting down and waiting, just taking a few jumps around the world to kill time. There you are, sir. Witch hazel or bay rum?"—Philadelphia Record.

One Point of Resemblance.

"The elder Sothorn was a good story teller, and he particularly liked to dwell on his experiences at the outset of his stage life, when he was a minor member of the John McCullough company."

"The manager was playing in Texas, and in one town where he was billed to play 'Ingomar' through some accident on the railroad, the necessary costumes were delayed.

"The manager was equal to the situation, however. He went to every butcher's shop in town and hired all the sheep and cow hides he could to dress up his supers.

"When McCullough came on the stage that night, he fell back appalled by the stretch of the hastily improvised clothing worn by the barbarians.

"What do you think of them? Sothorn laughingly asked McCullough, pointing to the supers as the curtain rolled down.

"They neither act like, look like nor talk like barbarians," curtly growled the tragedian, "but, by the gods, they smell like them."—Kansas City Independent.

He Didn't Choke.

Toward Mecca the thoughts and aspirations of all pious Moslems are turned, and at least once in his lifetime the good Mohammedan is expected to make a pilgrimage to that city. One of the duties of the pilgrim immediately after his arrival is to make a journey seven times round a holy portico outside the mosque.

"We went at a great pace," says an Englishman, who, disguised as a Mohammedan, paid a visit to Mecca at the risk of his life, "and the day was growing hot. When the procession was over, we came back to the mosque and were each given a bowl of limpid water. I was so thirsty that I drank mine at a draft and asked for more, which I noticed produced a very good impression, for, as I afterward learned, this was the sacred water of Temzen, which an infidel cannot drink without being choked.

"This was supposed to be the water which was supplied to Hagar when she was perishing in the desert."—Christian Endeavor World.

He Rode Down.

Algernon Dougherty of the United States diplomatic service has qualities of his own to account for his success as well as being the son of the famous "Silver Tongued" Dougherty of Philadelphia. One of the rules of the aristocratic Parisian concierge is that while one may ride up in the elevator one must not ride down. It was Mr. Dougherty who broke down this rule in a house in the Rue de Maturin.

He started down, and the concierge stopped the elevator. "It is forbidden." "By whom?" "The proprietor forbids it," said the concierge.

Mr. Dougherty drew himself up and said, "Tell your proprietor that I forbid him to forbid me anything!" and rode on down. And now even the timid maiden ladies on the sixth floor play with that elevator as though it were a tame cat.—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Gallery Answered Martha.

Of the Dublin gallery boys a famous baritone, in his reminiscences, tells some good stories—one of "Faust," in which he played Valentine.

After the duel Martha, who rushed in at the head of the crowd, raised Valentine's head and held him in her arms during the first part of the scene and cried out in evident alarm:

"Oh, what shall I do?"

There was a deathlike stillness in the house, which was interrupted by a voice from the gallery calling out: "Unbutton his waist!"

His Company.

Mark Twain, meeting Charles Guthrie, a prominent British lawyer, in Vienna, asked him if he smoked. "Sometimes, when I am in bad company," was the reply.

After a pause came a second question: "You're a lawyer, aren't you, Mr. Guthrie?"

"I am, Mr. Clemens."

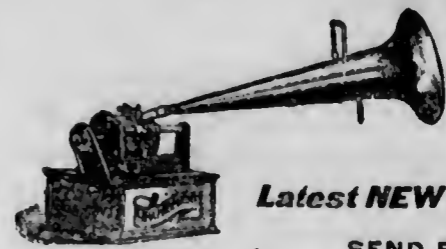

"Ah, then, Mr. Guthrie, you must be a very heavy smoker!"

When a woman calls her husband up by telephone without his knowing who she is, she is always surprised to see how politely he addresses her at first.—Somerville Journal.

CHEAP HOG SHELTER.

The Sort of Structure Here Described Is Getting to Be Quite Popular in Some Sections.

There is a tendency with many farmers to turn from the old-fashioned hoghouse to the small shelters large enough to hold possibly a half-dozen medium-sized pigs, says a Michigan farmer in Breeders' Gazette. Even farmers who still cling to the large hoghouse are using small shelters in addition to the other, where hogs are turned off into a field, and in some cases in small yards the large house might be used. The small house has the advantage of being more easily handled, and involves less attention to keep in order.

In building such a structure the first thing is to build the frame. This is simple, and can be modeled largely after the general outline of the shed. The first things necessary are the runners on which the affair is to be built. Perhaps nothing better than two seven-foot planks three inches thick and six inches wide can be secured. Hewed sticks from the wood lot can also be made to do. The general dimensions of the building are six feet each way at the base, five feet six to the gable, with a six-foot slant length to the roof. The frame for the ends will follow the general outline of the roof edge. The A-shaped ends are connected with gable piece and two crosspieces somewhere between gable and where bases are nailed to the runners. The runners are connected by three crosspieces two feet apart, to which the floor is to be attached. For the general framework seven 12-foot two by fours are all that is necessary. Twelve feet is the best length, from the fact that all are cut six feet long, thus avoiding all waste.

The lumber used in covering the framework should be of good quality and practically clear, or, if knotty, the knots should be sufficiently firm that there will be no danger of holes. I think four-inch pine, matched stuff, is preferable. If this width is used, 19 12-foot boards will cover the building in good shape without any great waste. In addition to these, there will be required eight more boards of same width and length to cover the ends. It will be a good idea to face the ends of the structure just below the roof boards, and also put boards on either side of gable. If this is done, there will be required three more boards of the same length and width as the others, save that it is preferable if this lumber is unmatched stuff.

It does not seem to me advisable to build one of these shelters without giving it a floor. It is something done, but because of rooting in the winter time such arrangements are seldom satisfactory. A floor is the cleanest, healthiest, and generally, most convenient. It is most apt to mean a warm nest for the hogs, and what is more important, a dry one. In putting in such a floor I would use nothing save two-inch planks, probably a foot wide. If this size is used, only three 12-foot planks will be necessary. I do not believe that a floor of inch boards doubled would prove satisfactory in such a place on account of the likelihood of holding moisture and ultimately decaying.

SENSIBLE HORSE TALK.

Don't throw time and money away on a lunkhead.

Neighborhoods must pull together in these times.

The man who has not an inborn fondness for horses should raise the steer.

Don't raise colts from a cross-grained, ill-tempered mare. She must be bright and intelligent, with a fine bloodlike head.

A western man who makes a specialty of coach horses has handled over 600 high-class horses since the beginning of the year.

Buyers know where to go to find the horses they want. Any neighborhood can bring the buyers to their doors by simply raising the stock.

It costs no more per pound to raise a colt than a steer, and the colt will sell for four times as much as the steer if the colt is of the right kind.

The business of buying and matching carriage horses and fitting them for the wholesale market is a new and important branch of the horse business.

A half dozen farmers in a community who appreciate a good horse and know how to raise a colt could, by patronizing or purchasing a high-class sire, bring the buyers in and make a nice profit.

A hired man who persists in swearing at or speaking to the teams in a loud, harsh manner should not be tolerated. All farm animals should be treated with kindness. It never pays to have timid, nervous animals. —Farm Journal.

HORSES FOR THE FARM.

They Need Weight as Well as Strength or They Will Break Down Very Quickly.

Farm horses need weight. Without weight they are not draft animals, but better suited for driving purposes. By weight is meant enough pounds of avoirdupois to draw the heavy loads of grain, etc., on the farm and to pull without undue fatigue plows and harrows and other implements utilized in farming according to modern methods.

We are told by the advocates of small draft horses that they are quicker than the larger animals and will do more work in a day. It may be said that under certain conditions light draft horses have the advantage of the "giants," but in the main the very heavy horses are of greater usefulness.

A draft horse weighing 1,500 pounds and having good bone and constitution will acquit himself creditably under nearly all conditions if properly trained and handled. But a big horse that is tricky and mean is worse than a small horse having the same undesirable traits.

The farmer wants a team upon which he may safely depend when hauling grain, coal or wood or when plowing stiff soil or harrowing mellow loam. It is claimed that heavy horses "have too much to carry," and therefore cannot endure as much exercise as smaller horses. Is it not a fact that these larger animals have stronger legs and better muscular development than the small horses? Certainly. Then why should they not be able to get along just as well?

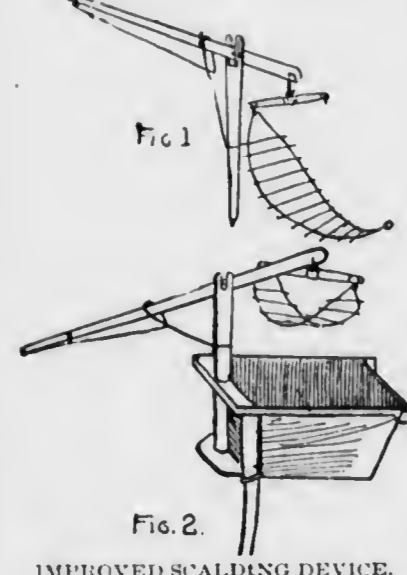

We believe if we were going into the business we should buy mares. The horse-breeding business promises to be even more profitable than it now is, and if the farmer will buy two or more good mares and breed them to draft stallions of established merit he not only can do his farm work with them, but raise colts that will more than pay for the mares each year. It will pay to get first-class mares—pay good prices for them.

The number of horses to be kept on the farm will depend upon the kind of farming done and the size of the farm. These things also will largely determine the kind of horses—whether all draft or a few drafts and a carriage team.—National Rural.

HANDY SCALDING DEVICE.

With Its Assistance One Man Can Handle the Heaviest Hog With- out Trouble.

With this device one man can handle the heaviest hog with ease. I have scalded 40 hogs with it, and know what I am saying. Place the hog on the rack (Fig. 1), then close it, then proceed as shown in Fig. 2. Lift the hog over the trough by taking hold of the long lever. Lower it into the trough, so that the rack springs clear of the bottom of the trough, then take hold of the cross lever and work it up and down, throwing the carcass from one side to the other, back and forth, until perfectly scalded. Keep trying the hair, so as to know when the proper scalding point is reached. Then swing out on the cleaning rack and take another hog. The figures explain themselves, says the Ohio Farmer.

Points on Horse Feeding.

Writing in Drovers' Journal, C. P. Reynolds says: The horse's stomach is built for more highly concentrated feed than the ox. He cannot take the same kind simply because he has not the capacity to digest it in sufficient quantities to supply his system with the needed nourishment. The result is when too much hay is fed the horse becomes badly pot-bellied and is unable to secure the required nourishment to work at the best advantage. A working horse should have plenty of grain, which furnishes his nourishment in the most highly concentrated form that is practicable to feed. It requires also a certain amount of hay, but the hay is not to supply it with the main portion of its nourishment. The most experienced teamsters are relying on grain for the main portion of the feed, not only because experience has demonstrated that it is the most economical, but that it is also best for the horse.

Is Lumpy Jaw Decreasing?

A representative of the Farmers' Review was recently talking with a business man who is brought into close relations with cattle raisers and who has abundant opportunity for observing the frequency or infrequency of cases of lumpy jaw. He expressed the opinion that the disease is less prevalent than in former years and that it seems to have been decreasing for the last five years. The gentleman in question says that there is less usual this year at least in the states most affected by drought. This condition of the weather he thinks favorable to a decrease of the disease.

TWO EAGLES WHIP A BEAR.

Novel Fight Over the Possession of a Huge Sturgeon That Was Washed Ashore.

A fight to a finish between a pair of eagles and a bear few persons have seen, and the sportiest sport on the turf would hardly know on which to bet in such a combat. Huns Larsen, a Norwegian fisherman who has been fishing for salmon in the Columbia near Eagle Cliff this season, saw a desperate fight between two fine bald eagles that had their nest not far from his camp and a half-grown bear. The eagles won, says the Portland Oregonian.

A huge sturgeon had been washed up on the river bank, and the eagles were using it to feed their young. One morning the eagles were serving breakfast to their young and one of them had down up to the nest with a lot of pieces of sturgeon and the other was tearing away at the huge fish when the bear came crashing through the brush to find the sturgeon he had scented. Bruin walked straight up to the fish. But the eagle was not to be scared, and he tapped his wings and stood on the defensive.

Big, fat sturgeon do not come ashore along the Columbia so frequently as they used to, and the carcass of this one was a prize, and it rightfully belonged to the eagles as the original discoverers. The bear paused a moment and then rushed at the eagle, which gracefully eluded him, and, soaring a short distance in the air, screamed bloody murder as a signal to his mate. She came swooping down from the nest and joined forces with her mate in an attack on the bear, which was so busy tearing the sturgeon that he paid no attention to the royal birds till they landed like thunderbolts on his neck and rump and sank their talons in his flesh.

The talons of a full-grown eagle are not to be sneezed at, even by a bear, and the howl of rage Bruin let out showed that he had been both pained and hurt. He reared up on his haunches and clawed savagely at the birds, which whirled nimbly about him. One would make a dash at his face and eyes and the other would hit him in the back of the neck like a catapult. For ten minutes or so the bear stood up to the "scratch," and when he had scratched enough he began to show signs of wanting to get away. He did not exactly show the white feather for the eagles had all the white feathers, but he began edging off toward the brush, which was 50 feet distant.

As soon as he was on all fours the eagles were on him, and he would have to get on his haunches to use his paws effectively. The blood was streaming down his face and showed in spots all over his glossy hide, but the great object of the eagles appeared to be to get at Bruin's eyes, and he seemed to be aware of this and was very anxious to get under the protection of the brush. The eagles were evidently just as anxious to prevent this. When Bruin turned his head toward the bushes they would plump down on his head and try to sink their talons in his eyes or to dig them out with their sharp beaks and drum his ears with their strong pinions until the poor bear did not know "where he was at."

All this time Larsen was sitting quietly in his boat watching what he says was the most savage and entertaining fight he has ever seen. It was, he judges, nearly half an hour from the time the bear came out of the brush till he was able to drag himself back under its friendly cover, where the eagles could not get at him, and he was the most dilapidated-looking bear imaginable. The eagles flew up on a tree and smoothed their ruffled plumage and congratulated each other on the outcome of the struggle. Then, as their eagles were squawking for more breakfast, they resumed their work of carving and serving their sturgeon and until it was all used up, which took several days, no animal offered to approach it, in the daytime at least.

An Abstemious Race.

"We are a temperate people," said a Chinaman of Race street, as he regarded one of his brothers coming out of a saloon with a bottle of beer, "and a slight like that is rarely to be seen here. Joe Kee has a white wife, you know. Maybe the beer is for her. Anyhow, not one Chinaman in ten in this colony would take a drink if you should ask him to, and not one in one thousand would get drunk. Did you ever see a drunken Chinaman? Are there Chinese among your barroom loafers and hangers-on? But you will say with a sneer that we all smoke opium, and that an opium smoker, of course, will not drink because the pipe gives one an aversion to alcohol. It is true that the opium smoker can't drink, but it is not true that all Chinamen smoke. For no one can smoke and work, and it is only the loafers of Chinatown, the card sharps and confidence men who hit the pipe. The true reason of Chinese temperance in this country is one of economy. We can't afford to drink, to get drunk, to be arrested and to be fined, and, therefore, as a race, would like to be just as temperate as any other people, only they control themselves. —Philadelphia Record.

Japan's Peers.

Japan will have to hold her hand soon in the matter of creating peers. No less than 275 have been added to the number since the system was inaugurated. In 1884 when peers were first created, patents were granted to 11 princes—excluding princes of the blood—24 marquises, 73 counts, 321 viscounts and 74 barons. Now the numbers stand: Eleven princes, 34 marquises, 99 counts, 363 viscounts and 281 barons. The total in 1884 was 503; to-day it is 773.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Philadelphia French.

A Philadelphia teller of the story of a waiter at a restaurant in the Quaker city who has lately announced that he has begun to study French. "Do you find it necessary here?" asked the customer. "Not here, sir," said the waiter, "but I've been offered a steady job in Paris at one of the hotels if I can learn French." "But Paris is full of French waiters," said the gentleman. "I'm afraid you're being deceived." "Oh, no, sir," said the man, with much earnestness and absolute simplicity. "It's a perfectly straight thing. The proprietor of the hotel says the waiters he has can't understand French as we Philadelphians speak it, and that's what he wants me for, you see."—Youth's Companion.

How He Was Sent.

Several ladies and their children were strolling through a cemetery reading inscriptions. "Oh, mamma," cried little Agnes, stopping at a grave, "here's some one sent C. O. D." The horrified mother turned to chide her daughter, but paused as she read: "James Brown, Co. D," on the headstone.—Chicago Daily News.

veloped our thoroughfares and announcing to the world that Marion is rapidly becoming a city.

The lights are in every particular up to the expectations of the people. No towns and very few cities can boast of a better system of street lights than ours. The lights are turned on at six o'clock in the evening and burn all night.
The work of wiring the business houses and residences is being pushed rapidly along.

Marion Man Honored.

Saturday Gov. Beckham appointed Mr. Jesse Olive, deputy warden of the Eddyville penitentiary,
State delegate to the National Prison
Congress, to be held at Kansas
City, Nov. 9th to 13th.

May Recover.

Allie Sisco, who was shot and seriously wounded by Grover Brown, is still alive and hopes for his recovery are now entertained.
For several days after the shooting it was thought death was inevitable, but so far the young man has been the victor in his fight against the enemy, and now his chances for recovery are much greater,
though he is not yet out of danger. A few days ago, county attorney Kevil visited the Sisco home and took what was then supposed to be the dying statement of the wounded man relative to the difficulty. That statement is not made public, but it is reported that in it Brown is made the aggressor in the trouble the night of the shooting. No date has yet been set for Brown's examining trial.

PROPOSED RAILROAD

From St. Louis to Nashville
Seems to be a Certainty.

The readers of the PRESS are aware that the Illinois Central railroad has had a party of surveyors at work for nearly a year on the farm of Mr. R. N. Walker, on the Ohio river, and at Cave-in-Rock, Ill., surveying and sounding the river, apparently searching for a suitable place to bridge the Ohio river. The route of a railroad has been surveyed through Illinois, from St. Louis to the Ohio river at Cave-in-Rock. The river has been tested for solid foundation every 200 feet, from the Kentucky side to the Illinois shore. All this work has been done quietly, the parties in charge of the work refusing to give any information whatever.
William Sloan, a prominent Illinois Central railroad official, came to Cave-in-Rock to view the work of the surveying party, a few days ago, and stated that the railroad was a certainty. He talked the situation over with the business men of that little city. The surveyed route, as is known, on this side of the Ohio river comes by the way of Crittenden Springs to Marion. The Hardin County New Era says in speaking of the railroad: "The road, when completed, will be a through trunk line from St. Louis, Chicago and the north, to Nashville and the South. The line will probably be completed and in operation within two years."

MISS MINA WHEELER.

Colored Teachers Institute Endorses Her Administration.

Whereas, Miss Mina Wheeler's second term of office will soon close; and whereas, we regard this as the last institute held by her,
in view of the fact that she is not a candidate for re-election. Be it resolved by the colored teachers of Crittenden county,

1. That in the administration of her official affairs, she has ever been efficient, conscientious and impartial.

2. That she has proven herself to be equally interested in the welfare of the colored and white schools, and that she has ever had the moral courage to act in accordance with her convictions, regardless of consequences.

3. That she has won the abiding friendship and esteem of the colored teachers of the county, and we join her many white friends in wishing her a happy and prosperous life throughout her entire future.

4. That copies of these resolutions be published in the Crittenden Press.

Two Odd Gentlemen from New York

By JOHN H. RAFFERTY

ROBERT JOYCE, of St. Louis, 33 years old, attorney at law, sat in his office reading the morning paper. He had no practice to speak of, but he had hopes and a rich young wife, whose ambitions for his future career as a public man were beginning to stir him to something like mental activity. Being a good mixer, handsome, eloquent and widely known as a "good fellow," he naturally chose politics for his field of effort, and as he sat poring over his newspaper, he was figuring in his mind that if he ever got the congressional nomination on the republican ticket in his district old John O'Brien, democrat and present incumbent, would give him a race for his life, and, probably, a beating. Therefore he was not overcheerful, and he had a rap on his door with a feeling of relief.

To his vociferous "Come in!" two enter strangers entered. Both were well dressed, of about his own age, of good address.

"Is this Mr. Joyce?" said one, smiling and extending his card as he saw the friendly nod. "I'm Howard Beck, of New York, Mr. Joyce, and this is my friend, Mr. Smyth, also a lawyer."

"Glad to know you both," said the radiant Joyce, motioning them both to seats. Then Mr. Beck drifted swiftly into a running fusillade of small talk, stories and witticisms, which, though apropos of nothing in particular, amused and even delighted the friendly Joyce. Mr. Smyth occasionally slipped into the conversation with a "that reminds me," and the host himself soon found that he had "a few good ones." They swapped stories, smoked Joyce's cigars, and made a few trips down the elevator to see the usual fourth party till it suddenly dawned upon Joyce that noon was at hand and that neither of his visitors had told the real object of the visit.

Then, as lawyers will, he began to get just a bit suspicious. He acknowledged himself that he liked both Beck and Smyth, but what, he asked himself, did they want? Manoeuvring to draw their fire, so to speak, he pulled out his watch. They took the hint, but instead of disclosing the object of their long call—they had been with Joyce nearly three hours—they arose and with great friendliness admitted that they had stayed too long.

"We've had a delightful visit," concluded Mr. Beck, "and we're glad to have met you."

"Call again some time," murmured the mystified Joyce, shaking hands.

When they were gone he puzzled over the matter for awhile and then went to lunch. He didn't return till nearly two in the afternoon, but when he opened his door he found Beck and Smyth sitting within waiting.

They greeted him with a fresh volley of scintillant stories, jokes and reminiscences, and before he could make a polite display of his astonishment he found himself involved in the conversation, laughing with them and ready for more negotiations with the hospitable fourth party downstairs. Nobody but the letter carrier interrupted the visit, it was even more prolonged and pleasanter than that of the forenoon, and the clock was striking six when Mr. Joyce pulled out his watch with an expression of natural bewilderment.

They took the hint again, stood up, shook hands, and for a moment looked foolish. Joyce thought that at least they meant to state their mission, but they only hesitated a moment and then started for the door. That was too much for him.

"Gentlemen," he bellowed after them, "before you go would you mind telling me what, that is, why, you—you called on me?"

They came back blushing and looking sheepishly at one another.

"Glad you ask," said Beck. "The truth is, Mr. Joyce, we came away from New York with a good supply of money, intending to stay two weeks in St. Louis. We thought we knew the great American game, didn't we, Smyth? But, well, to make a long story short, we met some Texas fellows coming out on the train who knew it better. What they did to us was plenty, for we landed here flat broke, and neither of us had the nerve to telegraph home for more."

"You see," broke in Smyth, "they'd never let us on at the club if they knew. A New Yorker hates to admit—"

"Fact is," interrupted Beck, "we asked the clerk in the Plauters if he knew a down-town lawyer who was a good fellow and he steered us up here. We found he was right, but—"

"Well?" suggested Joyce, amazed and amused.

"Well, we haven't had anything to eat yet to-day. We thought you would ask us to lunch, and we came back hoping you'd ask us to dinner, but—"

"Why in the name of Zeus didn't you say so this morning?" roared Joyce, grabbing his hat and hooking arms with them.

"Afraid you'd take us for con men," said Beck.

"We hated to make such a play at a good fellow," agreed Smyth. "Joyce had a dim but lingering suspicion that he was being 'played,' but he couldn't resist his new-found friends. He took them over to the Plauters' hotel, cashed a check for $300 and loaned each of them $150. They remained there ten days, he saw them frequently and liked them better at each meeting. But—"

"Some old story," mused Joyce, when he knew they had gone without paying him. "I'm a mark and I deserve to be bunked. I knew it was coming, but I overlooked it for awhile."

Then he charged the $300 to profit and loss and in the excitement of his first campaign forgot all about Mr. Beck and Mr. Smyth, of New York. As he had expected, he had no trouble getting the republican nomination for congress, but the ease of that victory was more than offset by the fight which old John O'Brien, the democrat, made against him.

The vote in Joyce's district was so close that both sides claimed a victory till the official count was announced. The figures gave the election to him by a narrow margin, and O'Brien filed notice of contest. The new house was democratic, and being a republican with no strong friends either in congress or in the democratic administration, Joyce had little confidence in his dual chance of landing in his seat at the capital. He was so sure that he'd be jugged out of the contest that he stayed away from Washington, leaving his affair in the hands of a few friends and a hired counselor. Even his wife's persistent confidence failed to reassure him.

"Never again for Bobby," he was saying to her one night, "no more congressional campaigns in this district for your truly. I'll never get another such chance to beat old O'Brien."

Then the maid brought him a telegram:

"Contest decided in your favor. That democratic lobbyist from New York did it. Congratulations, Tompkins."

His wife kissed him 11 times and cried for joy. They read and reread the telegram from Attorney Tompkins and puzzled over the sentence: "That democratic lobbyist from New York did it."

"Wonder what it means?" mused Joyce. "I didn't hire any other lobbyist, and if I had he wouldn't have been a democrat."

Tompkins came back on Saturday and was at Joyce's office before ten o'clock. When they had celebrated for a moment the young congressman asked:

"What the deuce did you mean by 'my democratic lobbyist'?"

"Oh, sure, he's entitled to all the credit. He worked day and night for you. You see, he's strong with Cleveland, going to be minister to Sweden or some place, and knows every congressman in the east. Fine lawyer, too, and, oh, yes, by the way, here's a letter from him." Joyce grabbed the letter and read:

"Dear Joyce—Inclosed I hand you back that $300 you kindly loaned me last spring. I would have sent it long ago, but I wanted to send with it some token of my appreciation. Your friend Tompkins will tell you that I did what I could to win that contest for you. Of course, you know I'm a democrat. I admit I hated to throw poor old O'Brien, but he never was a life-saving station for me, and you were. Look me up when you come to Washington. Smyth sends regards. Yours gratefully,

"HOWARD BECK."

"I tell you, Bob, that friend of ours, Beck, is a prince," said Tompkins. "Yes, and when he was here I didn't even have style enough to ask him out to my house," growled Joyce. "I never will learn to trust men."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A JESTING JUDGE.

Amusing Stories of Lord Morris, the Well-Known English Jurist, and His Ready Wit.

It was Lord Morris who, when somebody spoke of Mr. Gladstone as a heaven-born genius, hoped that "it may be a long time before heaven is again in an interesting condition," relates the Philadelphia Telegraph. A missing juror once inspired him to humor. The juror's name was Moriarty, and it was at the time when all Ireland was singing: "Are ye there, Moriarty?" a popular pantomime song. Leaning back in his seat while the juror was being found the judge began to sing, loud enough for all in court to hear: "Are ye there, Moriarty-ty?" and when the juror came in and explained that he had been having a pint of porter and a penny roll Lord Morris was not afraid to remind him that that was not the Rowells court. At the lot of Lord Morris to array himself in gorgeous and gaudy robes at a flower show which was opened by Princess Christian, and his lordship felt compelled to apologize to the princess for his apparel. "Your royal highness will observe," he said, "that as vice chancellor of the university I am obliged to wear all this finery. I think it only fair to offer you this explanation, lest you should think I am trying to transform myself into a sunflower."

DAVY BURNS' CABIN.

Modest Little Cottage Was Oldest House in Washington.

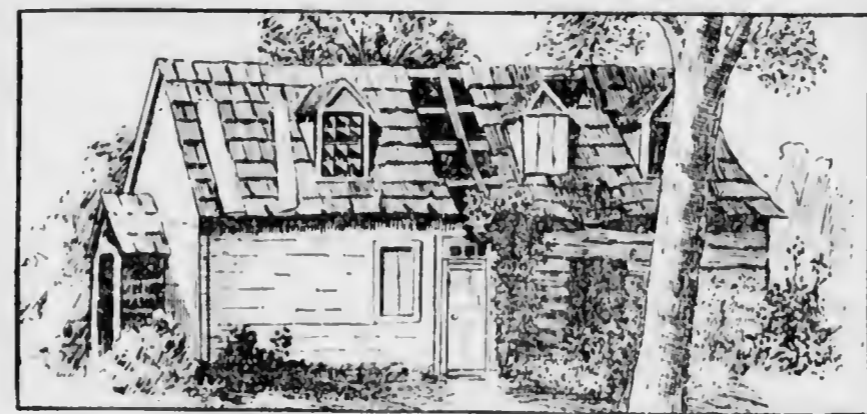

Northwestern Section of Capital Now Stands on the Canny Scotchman's Farm—Other Points of Historic Interest.

[Special Washington Letter.] IT IS easier to be superficial than to be profound. It is easier to enjoy the rainbow than to analyze it. It is easier to enjoy an ocean voyage than to build a ship. Therefore it is that the superficial prevails in all things.

The first commandment of Scripture was that man should toil and earn his daily bread "in the sweat of his face." And that commandment is ignored and violated more often and more cheerfully than any other injunction of revelation or experience. Men do not like to delve. They prefer to be "carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease." Therefore it is that superficiality prevails.

Travelers seldom do any thinking for themselves. They leave the guides to do their thinking for them. They do read guide books and copy their pages while "doing" Europe, in order to send home beautiful descriptive letters to their relatives and friends. But, as a general thing, they pay cash to the guides to do their celebrations for them. It is so much easier. Besides, they buy photographs of what they see, and those pictures enable them to tell wonderful stories after they return to home, sweet home.

It is the same way even with the wiser ones who travel first about their native America, and hence they do not know their own country profoundly, even after they have seen it. They do not talk to the hotel bell boys, the porters, the policemen, the newsboys, and all the others who carry under their humble hats mines of valuable information concerning local surroundings and traditions. In every city or village or mountain fastness, even in our own country, the travelers depend on the guides; and the guides have stereotyped stories which they repeat (parrot-like) to all comers with coin. The spirit of investigation is inert, because it is easier to listen and enjoy than to diligently inquire.

The majority of our own people who visit the national capital carry away with them only superficial ideas concerning the seat of federal government. The guides show them the capitol, the Washington monument, the executive departments, the Smithsonian institution, the money vaults of the treasury, and other points of general interest; but they do not show them the historical points of interest. Consequently the visitors depart without any information concerning many most interesting places. That is to say, the points which ought to be of most interest to those who realize that their national capital city is becoming replete with places of historic interest, just as the ancient capitals of the world have their places of historic pride.

The great men who made the nation have all lived here, and their imprint is still visible in one way or another. Many houses are still standing which have been their homes, and a great deal of interest lingers about these ancient structures. Of these habitations, whose very names recall so many thrilling reminiscences, not one was so dear to the city's early history as that little cottage which, until it was razed by vandal hands, stood on these grounds at the foot of Seventeenth street. It was that famous little cottage, the oldest house in the city at that time, which was built by the Scotchman, Davy Burns, over 140 years ago.

In this modest cabin, which stood in the depths of a great forest that once bordered the Potomac at this point, Gen. Washington used to come to confer with the "obstinate Davy Burns," in relation to the purchase of his land, which was included in the site of the "federal city."

With the commissioners who were appointed to lay out the city the wily little Scotchman would not confer, and it was only through the persistence of Gen. Washington, and by threats, that he was induced to give up his land at all. At last, however, he yielded, and the beautiful northwestern section of the city now stands on his farm. Davy Burns' barn was on the ground where now the white house stands, and his orchard is now Lafayette square, opposite the executive mansion on Pennsylvania avenue.

The guides who know the whole city, as well as the executive departments, will point out this spot and tell all about it. They will also show the Van Ness mansion, still standing, within the same old farm grounds. There Burns' daughter, Merce, presided and dispensed the most liberal hospitality in the most spacious and elegant mansion in this vicinity. It cost $75,000, an immense sum at that time, and its furnishings were correspondingly expensive and elaborate.

In the center of Lafayette square stands the equestrian statue of Gen. Jackson, and its history is told by guides who know the struggle of Mills, the sculptor, to produce it. Clustered around that square are many houses made famous by historic happenings. On the north side is the Decatur residence, in the library of which the brave old commodore died from wounds received at Bladensburg in the duel with Commodore Barron. Diagonally across the street is the former home of W. W. Corcoran, the philanthropist, a house subsequently occupied by Hancock, the historian; Senator Brice, of Ohio, and Secretary of War Alger.

On the northeast corner of the square is the Cosmos club house. It was the home of Dolly Madison, the most charming entertainer of the day, who, when subsequently mistress of the white house, made a reputation for charms and graces which will ever linger in history along with the reputations of the distinguished men in the dawn of the century. Almost adjoining is an opera house, which stands upon the site of the home occupied by Secretary of State Seward, at the time of his attempted assassination; and it was also occupied by Secretary of State Blaine, who died beneath its roof. It was from this house that Phil. Barron Key emerged in February, 1859, when Daniel E. Sickles met him and killed him while he was signaling for Mrs. Sickles to meet him.

At the corner of Eighteenth street and New York avenue, which was also a part of the Burns estate, stands the "Octagon," one of the oldest residences in this city, which was built by Col. John Taylor in 1803, being then surrounded by primeval forest. This house was tendered to and occupied by President and Mrs. Madison, in 1814, after the white house had been destroyed by British troops. For two years it was de facto the executive mansion.

The capitol building having been destroyed at the same time, a trio of houses on capitol hill was rented and fitted up for the use of congress, and has since been known as the "old capitol." Subsequently this was a popular boarding house, and here John C. Calhoun died. During the civil war it was used as a military prison.

No. 201 I street, northwest, is a massive home which was built by Senator Douglas, of Illinois; and there Douglas said: "The adjournment of the convention from Charleston to Baltimore means disunion." After that, although he made a splendid campaign for the president against Lincoln, Douglas did not expect to be elected. The last distinguished occupant of this house was Cardinal Satolli. On the same square there is a handsome home which was given to Gen. Grant by New York friends, and there he lived until he moved into the white house.

You should also see the former residence of Salmon P. Chase, secretary of the treasury, and chief justice of the supreme court, whose daughter Kate almost rivaled Dolly Madison in beauty and grace as an entertainer. That brilliant and happy home has seen vicissitudes. It was for a number of years a popular boarding house, and then a club house. One block south of it is the Webster law building; so named because it was the last Washington residence of the famous senator- orator from Massachusetts. Near by, on the same street, is the hotel home of Henry Clay, where the gifted Kentuckian lived for more than a score of years, and where he died. His room is preserved just as he left it. All of these places are now far from the fashionable residence section; but in the days of their eminent occupants they were in the center of the social swirl, and within their halls were many gatherings such as we now have in newer walls, where youth and pleasure meet to chase the glowing hours with flying feet.

Modern Washington is interesting, of course; but you will be entertained and instructed by seeing the ancient city of our new republic, and you must surely see it some day.

THE CONDUCT OF THE DAIRY.

Fifty Dairy Rules Promulgated by the Dairy Division of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

These rules are printed on one side of a large card-board for posting in stables and dairy rooms, and will be sent in this form to persons applying for them to the dairy division, bureau of animal industry, department of agriculture, Washington, D. C.:

1. Read current literature and keep posted on new ideas.
2. Observe and enforce the utmost cleanliness about the cattle, their attendants, the stable, the dairy, and all utensils.
3. A person suffering from any disease, or who has been exposed to a contagious disease, must remain away from the cows and the milk.
4. Keep dairy cattle in a room or building by themselves. It is preferable to have no cellar below and no storage loft above.
5. Stables should be well ventilated, lighted and drained; should have tight floors and walls and be plainly constructed.
6. Never use dirty or musty litter.
7. Allow no strong smelling material in the stable for any length of time. Store the manure under cover on the side of the cow stable and remove it to a distance as often as practicable.
8. Whitewash the stable once or twice a year; use mud plaster in the manure gutters daily.
9. Use no dry, dusty feed just previous to milking; if fodder is dusty, sprinkle it before it is fed.
10. Clean and thoroughly air the stable before milking; in hot weather sprinkle the floor.
11. Keep the stable and dairy room in good condition, and then insist that the dairy, factory, or place where the milk goes be kept equally well.
12. Have the herd examined at least twice a year by a skilled veterinarian.
13. Promptly remove from the herd any animal suspected of being in bad health, and reject her milk. Never add an animal to the herd until certain it is free from disease, especially tuberculosis.
14. Do not move cows faster than a comfortable walk while on the way to place of milking or feeding.
15. Never allow the cows to be excited by hard driving, abuse, loud talking, or unnecessary disturbance; do not expose them to cold or storms.
16. Do not change the feed suddenly.
17. Feed liberally, and use only fresh, palatable feed, and in no case should decomposed or moldy material be used.
18. Provide water in abundance, easy of access, and always pure; fresh but not too cold.
19. Salt should always be necessary.
20. Do not allow any strong flavored food, like garlic, cabbage and turnips, to be eaten, except immediately after milking.
21. Clean the entire body of the cow daily. If hair in the region of the udder is not easily kept clean it should be clipped.
22. Do not use the milk within twenty days before calving, nor for three to five days afterwards.
23. The milk should be clean in all respects; he should not use tobacco; he should wash and dry his hands just before milking.
24. The milk should wear a clean outer garment, used only when milking, and kept in a clean place at other times.
25. Brush the udder and surrounding parts just before milking, and wipe them with a clean, damp cloth or sponge.
26. Milk quietly, quickly, cleanly and thoroughly. Cows do not like unnecessary noise or delay. Commence milking at exactly the same hour every morning and evening, and milk the cows in the same order.
27. Throw away (but not on the floor, better, in the gutter) the first few streams from each teat; this milk is very watery and of little value, and it may injure the rest.
28. If in any milking a part of the milk is bloody or stringy or unnatural in appearance, the whole mess should be rejected.
29. Milk with dry hands; never allow the hands to come in contact with the milk.
30. Do not allow dogs, cats or loafers to be around at milking time.
31. If an accident occurs by which a pail full or partly full of milk becomes dirty, do not try to remedy this by straining, but reject all this milk and rinse the pail.
32. Weigh and record the milk given by each cow, and take a sample morning and night, at least once a week, for testing by the fat test.
33. Remove the milk of every cow at once from the stable to a clean, dry room, where the air is pure and sweet. Do not allow the cans to remain in stables while they are being filled.
34. Strain the milk through a metal gauze and a flannel cloth or a layer of cotton as soon as it is drawn.
35. Aerate and cool the milk as soon as strained. If an apparatus for aeration and cooling at the same time is not at hand, the milk should be aired first. This must be done in pure air, and it should then be cooled to 45 degrees if the milk is for shipment, or to 60 degrees if for home use or delivery to a factory.
36. Never close a can containing warm milk which has not been aerated.
37. If cover is left off the can, a piece of cloth or mosquito netting should be used to keep out insects.

38. If milk is stored, it should be held in tanks of fresh, cold water (renewed daily), in a clean, dry, cold room. Unless it is desired to remove cream, it should be stirred with a tin stirrer often enough to prevent forming a thick cream layer.

39. Keep the night milk under shelter so rain can not get into the cans. In warm weather hold it in a tank of fresh cold water.

40. Never mix fresh warm milk with that which has been cooled.

41. Do not allow the milk to freeze.

42. Under no circumstances should anything be added to milk to prevent its souring. Cleanliness and cold are the only preventives needed.

43. All milk should be in good condition when delivered. This may make it necessary to deliver twice a day during the hottest weather.

44. When cans are hauled for they should be full, and carried in a spring wagon.

45. In hot weather cover the cans, when moved in a wagon, with a clean wet blanket or canvas.

46. Milk utensils should be made of metal and have all joints smoothly soldered. Never allow them to become rusty or rough inside.

47. Do not haul waste products back to the farm in the same cans for delivering milk. When this is unavoidable, insist that the skin milk or the tank be kept clean.

48. Cans used for the return of skim milk or whey should be emptied and cleaned as soon as they arrive at the farm.

49. Clean all dairy utensils by first thoroughly rinsing them in warm water; then clean inside and out with a brush and hot water in which a cleaning material is dissolved; then rinse and lastly sterilize by boiling water or steam. Use pure water only.

50. After cleaning, keep utensils, inverted, in pure air, and sun if possible, until wanted for use.

Potash in Plant Growth.

Since the earliest investigations of thirty years ago or more it has been taught that agricultural plants can not attain normal development in the absence of potash; and, in the light of modern experiments, it would seem that the conclusion that potash stands in a different and much more important relation to the physiological needs of plants than does soda, can not be evaded.

There is, in fact, no reason for modifying the deductions drawn from the data of the earlier investigators. The experiments in question began in the winter 1898-99, and were continued in the winter of 1899-1900. They were conducted in a forcing house devoted entirely to plant nutrition, their object being to ascertain the possibility of substituting soda for potash in plant growth.

Pure ground quartz sand was used, and the plants were grown in galvanized iron pots. These each contained 25 pounds of sand, and four to six pounds of drainage material, the latter consisting of quartz chips. Aeration was secured by connecting the drainage with glass tubes extending up the side of the pots above the sand. Barley, peas and tomatoes were the plants experimented upon.

It was demonstrated that a deficiency of available potash greatly depresses the growth of the plant even in the presence of an abundant supply of soda salts. A lack of soda in the presence of potash sufficient for the plants' needs was found to have no deleterious effect whatever upon the growth. Plants to which the necessary supply of potash was not accessible took up more soda than when potash was present in abundance. But while soda may be substituted for potash in quantity, it evidently can not do so in function, as was shown by the limited growth when the plants were deprived of potash, even though soda was appropriated in increased proportions.—London World.

HERE AND THERE.

—The widespread drought has resulted in lowering the quality of the hogs in the great packing centers. Some sections are sending to market fairly good stock, but the average is far below the average of recent years.

—Broom corn may be profitably grown almost anywhere. The income per acre is greater than that from cotton, and it costs less to grow and prepare it for market. It is a good drought-resister, as it is a variety of sorghum.

—Indiana has six large skunk farms, and the industry is becoming so extensive that a "trust" has been formed. The pelts are valuable, bringing from $1.50 to $2.50 apiece, according to color, the darker colors commanding the best price.

—Those who have silos to fill should fill them now if they have anything to fill them with. There is some corn with life enough in it to make silage, and sorghum, both now and later, will be all right. These crops siloed will be better feed than if saved in any other way.

—All pullets that fall short of the proper size for the breed should be disposed of one way or another. They are not fit for breeding. It is more important that hens be of full size than for cocks. A medium-sized cock, if vigorous, will father as large chicks as one of elephantine proportions.

—Many of the cattlemen are speying their heifers, with the intention of making beef of them. They are afraid of an over-production of cattle. The result will be that when prices go up these men will be short on breeding stock, and consequently unprepared for taking advantage of the favorable circumstances.

The Making of Souvenirs.

The desire for souvenirs upon the part of the large crowds lined along the railroad tracks was a distinctive feature of the McKinley funeral train. The most popular of all the methods adopted was the placing of coins on the track so that the train might pass over them, smashing flat the pieces of money as a mark of identification in years to come. This practice was not confined to any particular point or crowd, but was indulged in generally all along the route. The mutilated coins were afterwards gathered up by their owners and displayed with much pride. At some stations, according to the train conductors, so many coins were placed on the rails that it caused a slight jar to the cars as they passed over them.

A CARD.

TO THE VOTERS OF CRITTENDEN COUNTY:

At the solicitation of many friends of the various political parties, and having received the nomination of my party without opposition, I take pleasure in announcing that I am a candidate for re-election to the office of county court clerk, and hope that you will give my claims due consideration, and any and all favors shown me in this matter will be duly and kindly appreciated; and if re-elected I promise a faithful and impartial discharge of the duties of said office, as I have ever tried to do in the past; and permit me to return you my heartfelt thanks for your many acts of kindness extended me, and for the confidence reposed in me as your public servant and friend in the by gone years, and during all of which time I have endeavored to be faithful to the trusts confided to me, in the discharge of all of my official duties required by law, but how far short I have come, you are to be the judges; and knowing that your judgment will be just, I submit my entire case with you, and whatever decision you may render next November, will be cheerfully accepted by me. Respectfully yours,

HE NEEDED MEDICINE.

But Not the Sort the Drummer Proposed to Give Him.

A well known drug drummer who was paying his regular holiday visit to New Orleans took the train for a little side trip to Baton Rouge and in the hurry of his departure left a handsome bone handled umbrella hanging on a hook in the lobby of the hotel.

It was a tempting prize, but probably every kleptomaniac who saw it supposed the owner was seated near at hand. At any rate, it remained undisturbed and was still there when the drummer returned.

"By the way," he remarked after he had exchanged greetings with the clerk, "I've managed somehow to lose my new bone handled umbrella. Have any of you seen such a thing lying around the office?"

A quick witted bellboy heard the question and, glancing around, saw the missing article hanging within a foot of his head. Supposing it had been there for only a few moments, he promptly grasped the ferrule.

"Is this the one?" he inquired.

"Yes," exclaimed the traveler, delighted, "and I must say I'm surprised nobody has nipped it!"

"Aw, they couldn't do that," replied the bellboy. "I've been holdin' on to it fer ye ever since ye hung it up."

The drug drummer stopped with his hand half way down his pocket, and a whimsical smile overspread his countenance.

"Well," he said slowly, "I was intending to give you half a dollar, but if you've been holding that umbrella for three consecutive days you're more in need of a tonic. Here is a capsule of quinine and iron."

It Happened in a Drug Store

"One day last winter a lady came to my drug store and asked for a brand of cough medicine that I did not have in stock," says Mr. C. R. Grandin, the popular druggist of Ontario, New York. She was disappointed and wanted to know what cough preparation I could recommend. I said to her that I could freely recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and that she could take a bottle of the remedy and after giving it a fair trial if she did not find it worth the money to bring back the bottle and I would refund the price paid. In the course of a day or two the lady came back in company with a friend in need of a cough medicine, and advised her to buy a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I consider that a very good recommendation for the Remedy." For sale by H. K. Woods & Co.

Blood.

We live by our blood, and on it. We thrive or starve, as our blood is rich or poor.

There is nothing else to live on or by.

When strength is full and spirits high, we are being refreshed, bone muscle and brain, in body and mind, with continual flow of rich blood.

This is health.

When weak, in low spirits, no cheer, no spring, when rest is not rest and sleep is not sleep, we are starved; our blood is poor; there is little nutriment in it.

Back of the blood, is food, to keep the blood rich. When it fails, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil. It sets the whole body going again—man woman and child.

If you have not tried it, send for free sample, its agreeable taste will surprise you.
